The birds tweeting, the sun gazing down on the town. Another normal day.

Strolling down the street,
Uncle John was going to fetch some groceries.
Oh, what a kind man he was!

The door of their giant house creaked open, as Nathaniel and Ellen arrived home, just before the sun rested. A warm apple pie was burning in Nathaniel's hands.

During the night the clouds went as grey as concrete. The rain started bucketing down.

5

A hurricane whirled throughout the town, the rain having no chance of stopping.

The clouds let out a big BANG! Lightning cracked on Uncle John's red as a rose roof, as the flames alighted.

Then the floods started. Water surged over the roads, rivers overflowing.

The next morning, after the hurricane died down, Nathaniel woke up to the cry of Uncle John. It was a horrible cry.

‘I lost everything,’ cried Uncle John.
‘My home, my food, my shelter, I lost
it all!’

Nathaniel swung the door open, where Ellen was waiting for him. After hearing what happened, Ellen looked really worried.

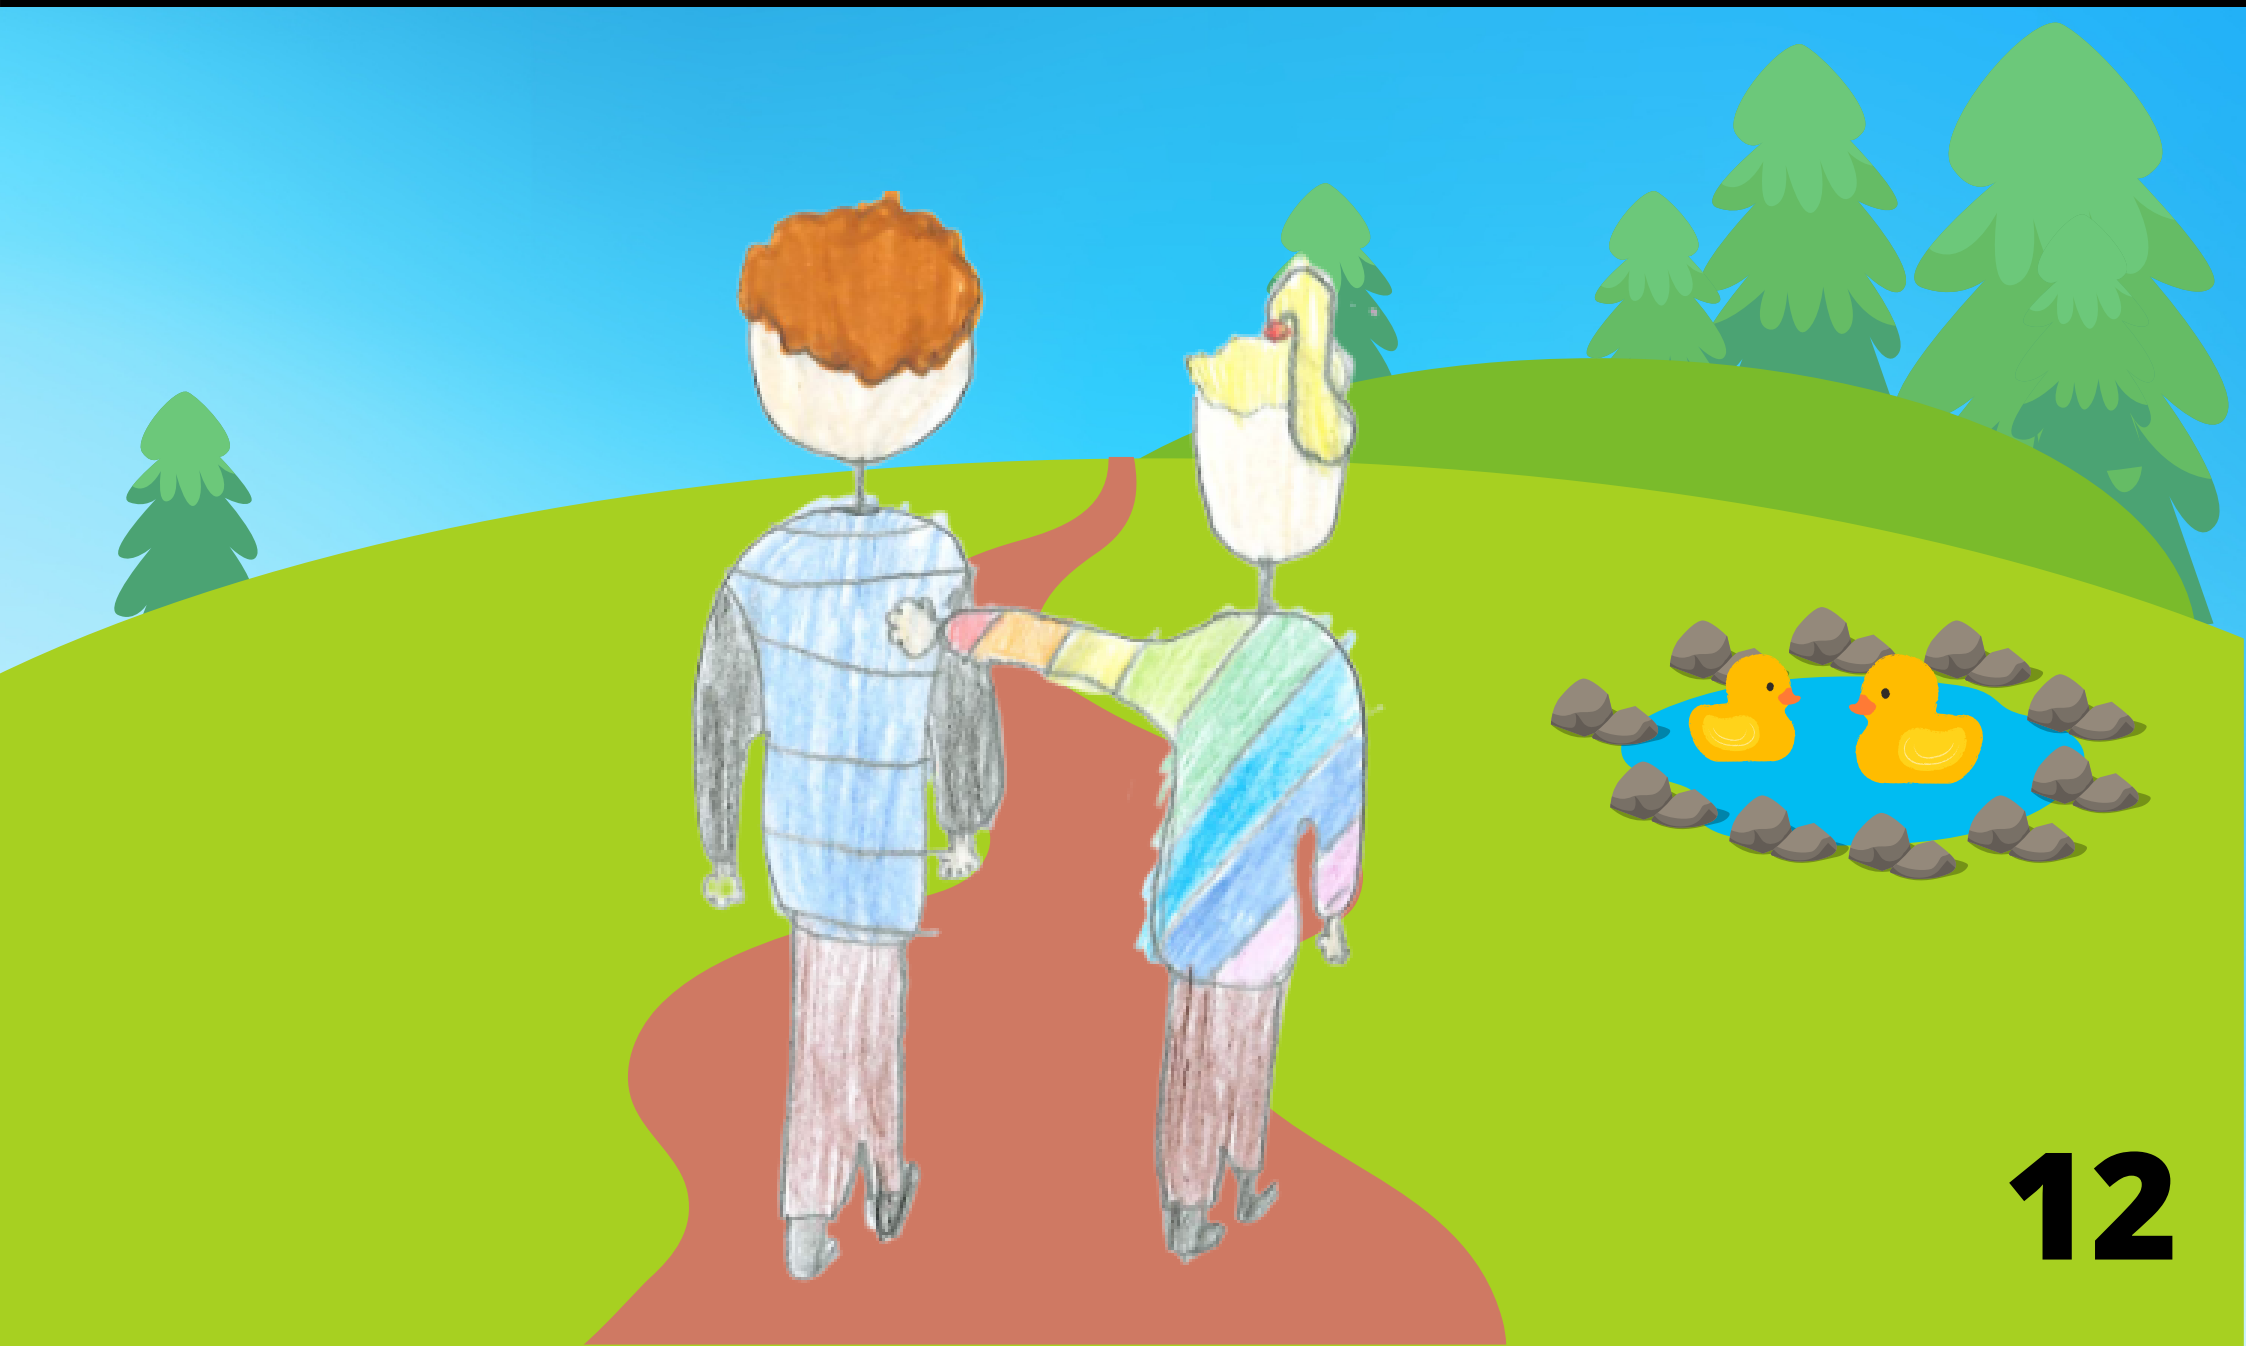

11

After a lot of thinking, Nathaniel looked at Ellen. Ellen looked at Nathaniel.

‘Come on,’ declared Nathaniel. ‘Let’s go.’

13

Nathaniel and Ellen went over to Uncle John and asked him whether he wanted to live in their house. 'There's enough room for you,' pleaded Ellen.

Uncle John happily agreed, and they strolled over to their house. They went inside and ate the wonderful apple pie.

A happy family they were.
