

In a small little village, in a small

Two bright blue eyes blinked, two legs moved and two lungs let out a loud cry but only one arm moved.

It was clear that he was disabled so his mother left him but his father had hope and he vowed to take care of him he named him Josiah.

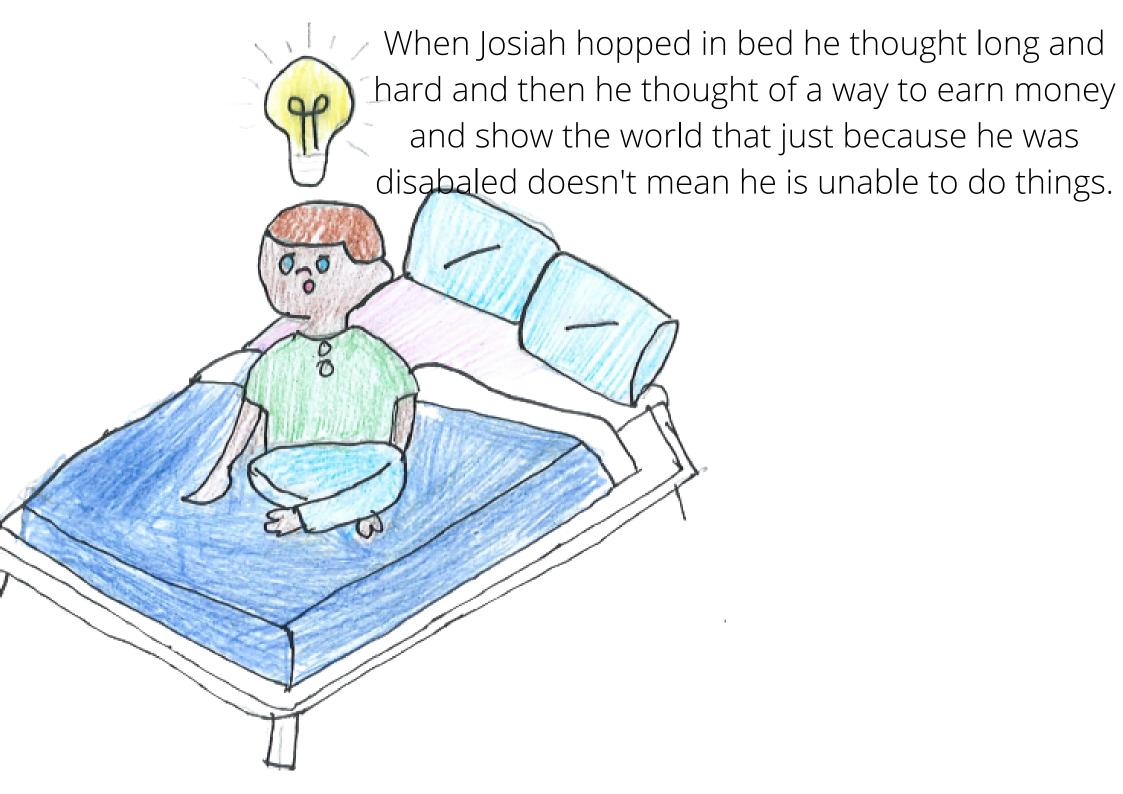

Then Josiah started to attend school but in order for him to go someone would have to carry him. His Father did but one day he said 'you are two heavy'. So from then on he walked to school.

At first no one would play with him so Josiah saved his money and bought something none of his classmates had a brand new downball so he played with classmates and earned their friendship

But then one day his father got very ill and could not run the shop. His brother and sister were too young to work so he.

At the crack of dawn he walked to the busy city. When he arrived he went to the town square and then he saw a table with a signup sheet he signed up for all the downball competitions there were.

He competed and competed and competed and won by hitting the ball with his good right hand. When he won he earned money and sent it home. He achieved two things, he helped his family and showed that just because he is disabled does not mean he can not do amazing things.

DEDICATION

The inspiration from this book came from the book the Emmanuels Dream

About The Author

This book is written and illustrated by Xavier Khan. He is currently ten years of age.

