

This Too Shall Pass

A story about grief, hope, faith, and friendship.

Once upon a time, there was a boy name John.

John was a happy kid. John loved school, loved studying, and loved his teachers.

But above all, John loved his parents!

Until one day, he found out that his mommy was really sick.

John's world turned upside down.
He was not a happy kid anymore.

A few days later, daddy told John that his mommy
was with the angels now.

John was so confused. He was sad and scared.
How can he survive without his mommy?

It was a sad and gloomy day for John.
He felt hopeless.

Until he met Sara..

Sara approached
John and asked him
"Hey! what's wrong?
You seem sad"

"My mommy is not with me anymore. She went to the angels", John responded

Sara said "Don't worry, John. It's okay to be sad. My grandma is also with the angels. I loved my grandma so very much and I miss her every day. But I know now that she is my guardian angel and always watching over me."

John felt a bit relieved after talking about how he felt. He knew he made a new friend who shared the same feelings, and that meant the world to him. He now felt that was not alone.

A few moments later, John asked Sara "But how did you become so happy after your grandmom went to the angels?"

Sara then responded "I kept telling myself - this too shall pass. Just like anything in this world, John, it will pass, no feelings last forever, and you will be happy again. Can I ask you to trust me, John?"

"Alright, Sara. I'll trust you" responded John.

This too shall pass, thought
John. This too shall pass.
John was a happy kid again.

"It will also come to pass that before they call,
I will answer; while they are still speaking, I will hear."

~ Isaiah 65:24